From: Capt. Baker

To: General Gophers

The mission given by Capt. Baker to LINDEMAN was to go through the lines and inform the chiefs of the Dutch Resistance, whose Headquarters were in Amsterdam, that all were to stay quiet.

Each pilot as they had in their hands were not to move out to any action as the Allied forces would shortly occupy the territory.

However, no time would be spent to them, and they were to stay at night still hold prisoners of the Germans.

LINDEMAN gave (without knowing exactly) that Amsterdam was the Headquarters for the Area of Noord Holland.

SALOMONS.

VERLOOP says he knows very little about this man, meeting him for the first time about September 1944, at the Utrecht office, when he (SALOMONS) had just come from Amsterdam with van den BERG. VERLOOP says SALOMONS was not previously well-known to LIIF, as he was only a sub-agent of van den BERG, who found him useful in keeping a check on names and addresses for him at the Bewillingsregister. SALOMONS had been for some time a member of the N.S.B. and members of the Underground had him on their black list, for which reason he found Amsterdam too hot for him, and came to Utrecht to be made a genuine LIIF agent. VERLOOP got the impression during the general conversation that SALOMONS had been working for van den BERG for some considerable time, but has no definite knowledge of this.

ARNOLD. (P 600 617)

VERLOOP says he never saw this name written but when spoken by Germans the name sounded like ARNOLD. It is certainly the same as ARNOT in the DAMM CASE and ARNAUD (LINDEMANS).

VERLOOP/LINDEMANS' Journey to Paris.

Both these men are hopelessly inaccurate about dates, but VERLOOP says this journey took place a week or so after LINDEMANS' introduction to the Apwehr, which he gives as early in March, 1944, though LINDEMANS makes it April/May. VERLOOP's version is the more probable.
